Policy professional & energy specialist

I'm a Civil servant in the policy profession with a keen interest and background in energy and writing. I was awarded the BP scholarship for energy/STEM students, and have an MA Energy (1:1) and BA Politics (2:1). I was an editor in two academic journals; Editor-in-Chief at an energy-specific journal. I hold experience in government energy policy and regulation for Ofgem and BEIS (formerly DECC). My MA thesis at the Russian university below was on the development of liquidity in the British/Dutch wholesale gas markets.

European University at St. Petersburg

- MA Energy: First-class honours / 4.0 GPA equivalent ("отлично")

Queen's University Belfast

- BA Politics: Upper second-class honours / 3.67 GPA equivalent

BEIS Policy Advisor

Oct 2016 – Present

- My policy areas include wholesale electricity markets and EU energy network codes - two areas that I had little specific knowledge of before joining, but quickly learnt given my energy background.
- I have represented BEIS by delivering presentations, delivering our position at discussions and workshops, and at industry events/conferences. Examples of this include presenting the story of the UK's energy liberalisation to Japanese government counterparts, representing BEIS' position at the Flame Conference in Amsterdam, and organising a cross-government conference on the potential applications of Blockchain in energy.
- I have experience and am comfortable with writing submissions, research reports, ministerial briefings, consultations, PQ responses, SI products, post-implementation reviews, and other core civil service products. This is helped by my proofreading/editing experience, as well as specific training I was given at Ofgem on 'Simpler, Clearer Communication'.
- I am also comfortable taking on a more hands-on approach. I was drafted into the price cap bill, where I took responsibility for making sure all products were delivered on time; this included choosing who to assign tasks to and where/when to shift resources. I have also independently managed implementation of a European network code.

Ofgem Assistant Policy Manager

June 2015 – Oct. 2016

I developed new policy on often technical areas, helped scrutinise new regulations, and used my project management skills to help deliver the administration of a renewable support scheme (the Non-Domestic RHI).

I also wrote technical guidance on different areas of renewable heat such as biogas or adding additional capacity. I communicated with scheme participants and industry where special advice was needed, and worked with the wider team to plan/deliver key communications. Using the Toyota Method, I helped meet KPIs of the operational side of the team; in one instance reducing response time by 500%. My performance review described me as 'innovative'. I also assisted the Communications team during staff-shortages.

Various Editorial Positions

September 2012 – Present

I have a longstanding interest in copy-editing, research, and editorial work. During my undergraduate degree I co-founded an academic journal – The Queen's Political Review – and took position as editor for the Europe & International section. I also worked on outreach for the journal, which included giving writing classes to MBA and postgraduate students. During my own postgraduate degree, I was Editor-in-Chief of a journal specific to energy – Energy Politics in Eurasia Journal (ENERPO). Much of the editing for the ENERPO journal involved rewriting papers that had been written by someone with an intermediate command of the English language. ENERPO Journal also helped host a Russia-EU energy dialogue, and I gained a lot of experience of working with different nationalities and teams through the journal.
